(S) The material presented was on a level with the experience of the officers who attended and vitally enriched their academic training. They were afforded an excellent understanding of the use of documentation to support intelligence operations and the requisite considerations in planning operations involving false documentation. It was appreciated that the lecturers were quite frank as to sources of procurement, techniques of reproduction of documentation, and the use of documents for counterintelligence purposes.

(U) Thank you for your courtesy in making these speakers available and please convey to them my sincere appreciation for their highly professional presentations.

Sincerely,

LAURENCE C. BROWN
